One of the most crucial and difficult tasks of the museum today is to communicate a country's natural and cultural heritage in a way that illuminates the contemporary situation. Keeping this in view, Bangladesh National Museum seeks to extend the perception of culture in the widest anthropological sense, linking our present-day life to the eternal creative search of man on the one hand and the material world--both natural and man-made--on the other to help the visitors discover a purpose that is common to all.
